Lore/Culture

History of Hex casting

Hex casting has a long history, its roots can be found in multiple cultures across the Fshmiro continent (located in the middle of the southern hemisphere). The most prominent of these cultures, which had the largest influence on the Hex casting alphabet, was the Plemant Culture. They valued things such as logical and rational reasoning, and counted using base six (for all six of their deities). The Plemant culture was the first to actually begin to fully harness and attempt to understand Milspur, despite their lack of success in field, this curiosity would eventually lead their descendants, the Emythros to discover multiple previously unknown properties of milspur and create a powerful and technologically advanced society.

Hex casting alphabet

The Hex Casting alphabet is an alphabet used for the casting and controlling of milspur, it is also the official alphabet of all cultures on the continent Fshmiro. The Estorian’s are the only ones who use the original spoken word version.

Culture and government of the Ameicof

The Ameicof Culture

The Ameicof people are a warrior people who settled down, and their culture reflects this. They value bravery and honor but are also kind and empathetic. They often go to war at the slightest provocation, but their people are generally caring and kind. Albeit a little bit nationalistic. They are often at odds with Entosland due to their long history and opposing ideologies. They are very technologically advanced in weaponry.

The Ameicof government

The Ameicof government at this time is a military dictatorship, even though it used to be a democracy. Because of this they have a very strong military, but relatively poor public services. Desperation for resources long lost to Entosland has lead to the society to militarise even more.
